

NO LAW FOR MUZZLING DOGS.

The Number of Persons Bitten Is Greater Than Usual.

Latest Case Reported Is that of an East Broadway Girl.

The question has been asked many times during the last week or two, why it is that the dogs running about the streets of the city are no longer muzzled.

The reason is that the new law, which went into effect last April, placing the licensing of dogs in New York City under the supervision of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals does away entirely with the muzzling provision of the old law.

This has been decided by Corporation Counsel Clark in an opinion which he submitted to the Mayor at the special request of the latter.

The old law was very stringent in its provisions with regard to the muzzling of dogs when running loose in the streets, and this was done because of the fact that the dogs were vicious. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, however, holds that muzzling a dog is inhumane, especially when the animal is of hypersensitive nature, the animal's mouth is closed tightly by the muzzle, and such a practice is in itself productive of suffering.

It is for this reason that the Society as decided to do away with muzzles entirely, and if more people than usual have been bitten by dogs late it is the result of the new order of things.

The argument which the advocates of the reform make is this: They say, that if the dog must be muzzled, it would be right to use it even at the cost of inconvenience and suffering to the dogs. But since the Society says the use of the muzzle is in most cases a superfluous and gratuitous cruelty.

They say the muzzle is useless unless it keeps the dog from biting. If it does not, it cruelly interferes with the respiration of the animal, which excludes wholly from the mouth, and thus causes the animal to suffocate, and sometimes extending even to fits and other alarming symptoms, which often prove fatal to the animal, from hydrocephalus when, in fact, it is only tortured by the muzzle.

There are many nervous people, however, who do not believe in giving the dogs all the liberty which the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals sees fit to allow them. In the name of the public, however, they do not believe that the Society's report is correct.

The latest report of this kind was made by the police this morning. The victim was a small girl, six years old, child, who lives at 127 East Broadway. She was playing last evening in front of 222 East Broadway when a visitor did run up and pounced upon her, biting the animal was pursued, but it escaped. The child was taken home, and is now a good subject for the Patent Institute.
